Conservation Grazing Reintroduced to Mindego Area of Russian Ridge

Beginning in November, Midpen reintroduced livestock grazing onto the Mindego Hill Area of Russian Ridge Open Space Preserve. Mindego Hill has historically been grazed since 1859. Livestock grazing on the property was interrupted when the previous grazer and landowner sold the property to the District and moved away from the area. The District used this opportunity to improve the grazing infrastructure and prepare the property for public access. Mindego Hill will be managed using livestock grazing under the District's Conservation Grazing Program in compatibility with public use on a small section of the Mindego Hill Trail. Visitors can expect to see cattle and ranchers, interpretive signage, and of course a few cowpies along the way.

SPOTLIGHTING MIDPEN STAFF

Rare Sierra Red Fox Spotted in Yosemite with Help of Midpen GIS Staff

The Sierra Nevada red fox of California is one of the rarest mammals in North America. Due to rare sightings, relatively little is known of the life history of the animal. In an attempt to know more and to save this important mammal, Casey Hiatt, Midpen's GIS Administrator, chose to focus her master's thesis on using GIS data to design a predictive model to help identify suitable red fox habitat. Her paper, officially published in 2011, predicts suitable habitat using climate and satellite imagery. The model quickly became popular in the wildlife research world, and Hiatt did not expect the impact her model would have on wildlife research and conservation.

Keith Stouen USFS/PSW - US Forest Service

Last year, Hiatt was contacted by Yosemite National Park, which asked to use Hiatt's published model for upcoming wildlife research. At the time, the Sierra Nevada red fox hadn't been documented within Yosemite's park boundaries in over 100 years. Using Hiatt's model, researchers were able to place motion-sensitive wildlife cameras in prime locations where the fox would most likely be spotted. When researchers returned for the camera footage, they realized they had something — Yosemite's first confirmed sighting of the Sierra Nevada red fox in over 100 years! Yosemite's research team contacted Hiatt and, with appreciation, explained that every documented sighting came from a camera that was placed using her model.

Confirmation of the Sierra Nevada red fox in Yosemite National Park provides an opportunity to join efforts with other researchers that will ultimately give these foxes the best chances for recovery.

Congrats to Hiatt and all her great work with Midpen and the field of conservation! 🌿

On Human and Bio-Diversity

Last month, the Bay Area Open Space Council released Here and Now (www.bit.ly/hereandnowfilm), a short film about the transformative partnerships that four land trust agencies, including Midpen, have forged with Native Americans, our continent's first caretakers, to help us repair the land and strengthen cultural practices that are beneficial to the earth. This film is part of a growing international movement that recognizes the important link between healthy biodiversity and thriving cultural diversity. In every corner of the world, people have developed cultural practices that strengthen biodiversity and, as a result, have sustaining, mutually beneficial relationships with the land. Nature seems to love diversity, in all its forms. On the other hand, monocultures, both in nature and in humankind, have proven time and again to be not only unsustainable, but often downright destructive.

So what can we do here and now to bridge science and culture, the past and the present, to solve the many ecological problems of today and tomorrow? Interestingly, the answers have been coming to us for years.

When we launched the multiyear Vision Plan process, hundreds of people told us that nature not only helped them lead fuller lives, but also strengthened their connections with neighbors, coworkers, friends, family members, and even with a higher power. Their vision for open space was one in which land agencies built and sowed connections between people through nature. They asked for:

- Youth outreach and education
- Greater use of technology to reach new audiences
- Places where people of all ages, abilities, and backgrounds can learn about nature together
- Outreach to underserved communities

In essence, they wanted all members of the community to lead fuller, happier, and healthier lives as individuals and as groups through a meaningful connection with nature. The end result of their vision would be a culture that values and sustains the earth.

A similar message was reaffirmed last year when a supermajority passed Measure AA. Within that supermajority, the areas with the highest level of support for the measure were also the most culturally and racially diverse areas within the district, often by a very wide margin. Clearly, the love and appreciation for open space exists in every part of our district and is expressed in many ways, and we are keeping our promise as part of Measure AA and the Vision Plan to expand outreach into our communities.

Valentin Lopez, Amah Mutsun Tribe Chairman with Steve Abbors, Midpen General Manager

So what are we at Midpen doing to bridge science and culture to strengthen these connections? One of our strategies is to go into communities. Over the last three years, we've greatly expanded our community outreach program and are now offering and leading outreach activities for Latinos, African Americans, Asian Americans,

South Asian Americans, immigrants, and many others. This year, for the first time, we've connected with farmworker families on the Coastside, the South Asian community through the Hindi Diwali celebration, African Americans through the annual Soul Stroll health walk, and Latino communities through schools and nonprofits. We're working with health providers to connect with people of a wide range of abilities and ages. Our outreach materials — already available in English, Spanish, Chinese and Korean — are now being developed for families and for the accessibility community.

This year, our tremendous volunteer and docent force is more culturally diverse than it has ever been, with greater language ability and an ever-growing community outreach volunteer corps.

Organizationally, we're expanding our cultural knowledge base and expertise by supporting research grants to local colleges and universities that:

- Identify ethnobotanical sites, experiment with traditional management practices, and collect plant materials for traditional use by the Amah Mutsun Tribal Band
- Study archeological sites to predict and survey locations of former Native American land use
- Survey archeological sites in Sierra Azul to provide information on Native American period use

To connect with future generations, we're working with children and youth from underserved communities to create connections with the land through service, recreation, outdoor education, and career exploration.

Through our outreach, research, and programming, our goal is not to impart a single worldview of nature, but to seek out and strengthen the many ways that people love and care for the earth; that is the surest path to becoming better stewards of the land. There is no better place to take such a journey than here, in our region with its incredible human and biodiversity, where people care deeply about nature and open space and embrace the love of learning and believe all things are possible.

GENERAL INFORMATION

With this newsletter in hand and a sense of exploration in mind, we invite you to enjoy the Midpeninsula Regional Open Space District preserves. These 26 extraordinary preserves include over 62,000 acres of permanently protected open space, from redwood forests to bay shoreline. We encourage you to participate in the wide variety of adventures offered inside Outdoor Activities.

The activity durations listed are averages based on our experience. However, always allow extra time in your schedule for unusual circumstances, or the slower pace of some groups.

You can help by arriving a little early to ensure a prompt start for each activity.

The activities are free, though some require reservations. Heavy rain cancels the activity unless otherwise noted in the description. If there is light rain or the threat of rain, go to the meeting place.

All activities are developed and led by docents who have completed a District training program. These docents volunteer their time to share their knowledge of nature with you. For more information about the volunteer docent program, visit the District's Web site at www.openspace.org, or phone the District at 650-691-1200 weekdays, 8:30 a.m.-5:00 p.m. 🌿

ECDM Creek Trail transformation from wide logging road to trail with improved drainage

Watershed Moment Over 10 Years in the Making

El Corte de Madera Creek Preserve, a former logging area and motorcycle park, has undergone a huge transformation in the last decade. Beginning in 1999, the District's watershed protection program identified the highest-priority sites needing assessment and implementation of measures to reduce the potential for sediment from roads and trails entering creeks and drainages. A few years later, once assessed and planned, the work began. The roads that were once catastrophic to the watershed, as well as to the future of the existing trails, have been repaired and restored. Project Manager Julie Andersen explains with pride, "This preserve has come such a long way. A once problematic road system plagued with sediment and drainage issues has now become a visitor-friendly trail system, thanks to our dedicated staff, contractors, and volunteers."

El Corte de Madera Creek Preserve is located in the headwaters of the San Gregorio Creek watershed, which is impaired by sediment. Throughout this decade-long project, the District, as one of the largest landowners in the watershed, has done its part to alleviate threats to the human and ecological communities.

Conservation Grazing Reintroduced to Mindego Area of Russian Ridge

Areas that were historically rangelands, especially in urban counties, are more and more often being developed. California Rangelands provide spectacular habitat for a number of special status plant and wildlife species and cattle grazing provides an important service to these working landscapes. Midpen uses conservation grazing to:

- Maintain and enhance native biodiversity and control invasive plants.
- Reduce wildfire risk by controlling fuel loads.
- Manage habitat for special species such as the California red-legged frog and San Francisco garter snake.
- Preserve and foster appreciation for the region's rural agricultural heritage and economy.

Are They Dangerous?

Due to their size, cattle seem more intimidating than other livestock. Cattle are large animals but are prey animals and not aggressive by nature. The cattle chosen to graze on Mindego Hill as well as other District preserves are selected based on their calm disposition and behavior around people. However, in rare circumstances, cattle can respond in a potentially dangerous manner if they feel threatened or cornered. Use common sense around cattle and remember the following:

- Try not to startle the cows. Keep your distance and walk around groups of cows.
- Avoid calves and do not get between a calf and its mother.
- Remember that Dogs are NOT allowed in Russian Ridge Preserve. Cows can't always distinguish between a dog and coyote and may become startled or defensive.

HONORING FIRST DISTRICT GENERAL MANAGER

Midpen's First General Manager, Herb Grench Honored at Windy Hill

Friends, family members, and Midpen staff gathered at Windy Hill Open Space Preserve on October 27 to celebrate the new Herb Grench Overlook and a perfect fit for the role. "Our supporters' expectation, or our own, seemed to be that we'd start saving open space on day one. My challenge was to build an organization and make some progress as soon as possible," Herb said when asked about his first days in the position.

Herb helped the District set up headquarters, developed a basic policy and master plan, collected a modest property tax, and began buying land for open space. Aside from the 20,000 acres of land preserved during his tenure, Herb is most proud of his role in the creation of the Peninsula Open Space Trust. "They have been instrumental in not only saving over 70,000 acres of land but also in building important public, political, and landowner support for open space protection," Herb said.

The new overlook offers 360-degree views of the Santa Clara Valley and Pacific Ocean and can be most easily accessed via the Skyline Boulevard picnic area parking entrance.

Midpen staff

Midpen's first General Manager, Herb Grench (seated on bench, center), celebrates a new overlook and trail named in his honor at Windy Hill Open Space Preserve.

A new bench and trail named to honor Herb Grench, Midpen's first General Manager, a key visionary in the founding of Peninsula Open Space Trust (POST), and a dedicated member of the Midpeninsula community.

A former Lockheed manager, Palo Alto Planning Commission member, and a leader in the local Audubon Society and the Committee for Green Foothills, Herb's passion and determination made him the
